WILD DOGS in AFRICA

Saving Our Oldest Friends

Dogs are often described as humans' best friends and have been so since the early days of the caveman and primitive hunting.

In modern times are we doing enough to give wild dog populations the space to breed or are they yet another of our world's most endangered species? I'm afraid they are now very endangered.

In Mozambique, the Fauna & Flora Organisation protects an enormous 586,800 hectares of land which is a refuge on our planet for these animals to live in peace.

The African Wild Dog, Lycaon Pictus, is known as the African hunting /painted dog or wolf and is native to Sub-Saharan Africa.

The Bowdleflode team aim to show all sorts of amazing species, so join us and put your own fantasy animal into the online Bowdleflode Zoo and help us concentrate minds on the fate of Endangered Species on Planet Earth.
